“Although the first quarter of 2023 saw challenging capital markets and a recent economic shift, management believes the supply and demand dynamics of the critical minerals market remains robust. The strength of the tin and rare earth segments specifically, combined with current global supply constraints, provides an opportunity to accelerate potential high-return strategic growth opportunities through the trading and sales of these commodities from various jurisdictions. The Company has made great progress in establishing a multi-channel revenue strategy during 2022, and although further project development has been off to a slightly delayed start, and the advancement of its commodity trading operations intermittent, this year aims to prove that the Company can create sustainable growth and significant shareholder value,” said Mr. Kozak.
